UMass research

I was delighted to see the “Research breakthrough on cancer” article on the front page of the May 8 edition of the Gazette.

The article noting the research conducted at UMass Amherst by faculty and students at the university’s Center for Bioactive Delivery, which has the potential to revolutionize cancer treatment with drugs being delivered to the right cells with fewer side effects, shows the remarkable work being done at UMass Amherst, even in the pandemic.

It is very special to see research done “locally” being of global significance and done by colleagues who are also neighbors. Thank you for celebrating great research on the front page — an example of exemplary, inspiring journalism.
